AFMC Junior Civilian Engineer of the Year named

KIRTLAND AIR FORCE BASE, N.M. — Charlotte Gerhart of the Air Force Research Laboratory's Space Vehicles Directorate has been awarded the 2002 AFMC Junior Civilian Engineer Award for Program Manager of the Year.

She received the award for her work on the VibroAcoustic Launch Protection Experiment. Gerhart led an eight-person team to launch the experiment in November 2002 to demonstrate advanced vibration and acoustic isolation technologies to significantly reduce satellite design requirements and number of on-orbit satellite failures. Her efforts will lead to total savings to the Air Force of hundreds of millions of dollars over the next decade. @

Air Armament Center major is top U.S. Slider

Maj. Brady Canfield

KIRTLAND AIR FORCE BASE, N.M. — Last year's Olympic trials in skeleton sledding were heartbreaking for Maj. Brady Canfield as he finished the season ranked fourth for the U.S. and watched three other men go on to compete in the 2002 Olympics. That was all rectified this year as he not only qualified for World Championships, but brought home the Bronze. To add to the buildup, two weeks later he won the U.S. National Championship.

Canfield competed in six world cup races this winter with a sled that Air Force Research Laboratory helped to design.

His World Cup results are: Calgary, Canada, 18th; Park City, Utah, USA, 5th; 3rd place at Lake Placid, N.Y., USA; Igls, Austria, 12th; St. Moritz, Switzerland, 19th; and Altenberg, Germany, 10th. His overall World Cup ranking is 11th, and qualified for world championships in Nagano, Japan. @
